in today's society - with 3rd 4th gen. which may not have both or single parents/ grandparents speak Greek in the house hold-or they speak "Kitchen Greek" -it is struggle for a kid to learn- plus in the case of my daughter they were teaching grammar in which the American school has not yet taught suggestion :

first 3 years conversational greek next 3 writing - grammer etc.....

The class is far to long at the end of an already long school day and leaves little time to finish homework and have dinner

I do feel the books are good however I would like to see more reading options. Perhaps a short story that the children could read weekly and discuss would further help their comprehension skills.

I think that the teachers do their very best to help our children but sometimes the level of language varies among the children. Maybe students in the lower grades should be grouped by the level of Greek understood and this way they could progress further.

You need a better system of communication , and please issue a greek school calendar at the beginning of the year that has planned days off and event dates .

The lesson plans are not clear. i.e. What is the material covered?, What is the intended material to be learned in each grade vs. what is actually taught, learned and accomplished.
Although the students have their text books and workbooks, it is not clear if all the material was covered and learned.
We like that they learn quite a bit of culture in the time that they have in school.

I feel we need to establish a basic understanding of the Greek language so our children are able to communicate, read and write in Greek. We can do this through stories that the children can relate to and constant comprehension checks during discussions.

I do believe that the survey should have encompassed families without children currently in Greek school to participate.

May have rounded out the survey and given the results more accuracy with people who have had prior experience, my child is not presently a student in Greek school.

when he did attend-he had no problems with reading and learning how to write but he did have a problem with the conversational part(almost all of the students came from homes where the language was spoken and they were fluent-he was not and it negatively impacted on his learning. He later took Spanish -not spoken in the home and became fluent-reading, writing and verbal- and is to this day even though it is NOT the language he uses daily)

I think the language should be taught using the methods which foreign languages are taught in private(or public schools). I believe that Greek culture should be taught as it is helpful when the students study cultures in their future learning experiences.

I believe if the approach was for students to learn a language with long term benefits -

helping them with SAT's learning other languages(specifically Spanish as there are many words from the Greek) understanding of Greek culture contributions-the results would be a life long learning experience.

I have two grand nieces who are majoring in the classics and miss not having the early language exposure.

each had 1 parent who was Greek(non speaking)

Greek School was not on their learning agenda

these are just my observations

I did Attend Greek School and had the advantage of being exposed to the spoken Greek language only from birth to 5 ears of age..

My siblings and cousins who were in families

where Greek WAS not spoken-never attended Greek School.
